

The New York Times

TIMES SQUARE NEW YORK N.Y. 10036

April 23, 1970

Dr. Joshua Lederberg,
Department of Genetics,
Stanford University
School of Medicine,
Stanford Medical Center,
Stanford, California 94305

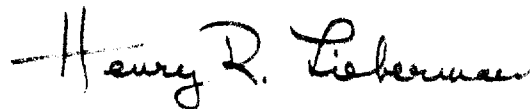

Dear Dr. Lederberg:

Of course you have our permission to reprint your article in CURRENT CONTENTS. Just to clear the way, if the way has to be cleared, enclosed is an official-looking document that specifically gives you permission to have the piece reprinted. I note that the form specifies that credit for reprinting is to be given to The New York Times, and I suppose this makes sense if it is a word-for-word reprint, but our understanding was that you were the owner of the contents and if the information is presented in some other form, you don't even have to consult us in the future. Just be easy about the whole matter and proceed as you see fit so far as further use of the material is concerned.

I am not sure I understand all aspects of the demand for $100, but I would surmise that this arose through an attempt on our part to make sure that you got paid for your work. Any confusion about this should be eliminated by the statement made in the enclosed form to the effect that the fee is to be determined by the author.

Be of good cheer. With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Henry R. Lieberman
Director of Science and Education News

HRL:bg